Based on the title of that book, it sounds like he was saying Under The Terebinths only males should be leaders. Rawolle was an engineer from New York who retired at the age of 32 after he sold to a major manufacturer the patent rights of an explosive device he had invented to fracture oil wells. The four-foot-wide wooden sidewalk along Washington Street held people, crates, barrels, and, here and there, chairs with slanted backs and wide arm rests. Classic Interview.
